A LOST HOPE.

"'It's a shame!" said Betty, the boarding house maid of all work. "Buttons off his shirts, his stockings a perfect sieve and not a string where it ought to be!"

"Let me see, Betty," said Miss Chequerfield, taking the bundle of newly ironed clothes gingerly between her Engers. Yes, it's his wash come home, sure enough, with 'Moses Rlandford' pinned on a paper, so there shouldn't be any mistake. I wonder if it isn't my Christian train. Instead of going out with other duty just to set a stitch in these. He's all passengers, he hunted up the special offialone in the world. Betty, give me my cer and said: workbasket."

"Yes'm," said Betty, and away she went to tell Mrs. Ferguson, the landlady, that "the old maid on the top floor had undertook to mend Mr. Blandford's clothes for him." Miss Mercy Chequerfield stitched away, humming snatches of song, as romantically as if she had been a 17-year-old. Sentiment lurked in the stockings. Romance was sewed in around the frayed edges of melancholy buttonholes.

the term "boy," was perhaps somewhat did you lose?" inappropriate.
"I wonder why he never got married," thought Miss Claquerfield. "Dear, dear, here's a button sewed on with black silk! I must cut it off and replace it properly.

well grown 6 footer of 40 odd summers,

And a sigzag tear just run up on the wrong side! Really, it's quite sad!" And Miss Chequerfield nipped off a stray end of thread with her scissors as victously as if it had represented the head of the imaginary coquette who had blighted the sensitive heart of Mr. Moses Blandford! Miss Meredith called Merey by the nickname of the Forniern Hope! She didn't mean anything. She was a little laugh-ing beauty, with a lover for each one of her ten taper fingers and two or three to spare, and Miss Chequerfield imitated her gravats and ribbon bows, with a fond idea that what became Patty Meredith could not be unbecoming to her. "I think somebody ought to tell that Chequerfield woman what a fool she is making of herself," said Miss Ferguson austerely. "Law, mem!" said Betty, "she wouldn't believe you! And she's got a good heart, arter all!"

Mr. Moses Blandford chuckled when he saw the basket of neatly mended linen on | with him?" the chair in his room. "Betty," quoth Mr. Blandford, eying the miraculous outblossoming of buttons where were blanks and dainty darns in place of unsightly rents. "Betty, who did

"That old maid, sir, across the hall," said Betty, grinning. "She was sewin away for dear life all this mornin." "Very thoughtful of the old girl!" said

Mr. Blandford. Betty, give ber my compliments, and tell her I am much obliged." Miss Chequerfield smirked radiantly when the message of thanks arrived. 'I knew he had an appreciative soul," never mistaken in physiognomy.' And she set diligently to work to embroider a pair of slippers for bim. From that moment Moses Blandford Hved, as it were, in a state of siege. Smoking cases, a crocheted nightcap, with a tussel like that of Ali Pasha's self, a scarlet dressing gown, nearly startled him out "Just as she can afford!" chuckled Mr. That will be right, won't it?" Blandford. So be wore the dressing gown, shuffled about in the slippers, pulled the nightcap over his brows every night and generally reveled in the goods the gools had provided for him, while Patty Meredith giggled, and asked Miss Chequerfield "if a day was set yet." going to be a wedding in the house as are to be commended. Farewell!"as if I saw the veil and orange Detroit Free Press. wreath!"

"Nonsensel" said Miss Mercy. "How can you?" And she blushed to the tip of her reseate nose as Mr. Blandford came into the room, a baldheaded Apollo.

"My goodness me!" said Patty. "What charming stippers! Where did you get them, Mr. Blandford!" 'A fairy dropped them from her wings!"

decide for himself what tie to wear." said Mr. Blandford, bowing clumsily in the direction of the spinster. Patty slipped considerately out of the room, and Miss Chequerfield felt that her hour had come. Mr. Blandford cleared his throat. 'I guess likely we're going to get rain,"

'Yes," fluttered Mercy, almost inaudi-"Gold's down again," he added.

"Is It?" said Miss Chequerfield. And at this stage the dinner bell inter-rupted the current of soft nothings. He will certainly propose tonight!" thought Mercy. So she dressed herself in a plum colored silk, with trimmings of black lace, and an artificial rose over her left ear, and came down stairs at about 8 Sparks? o'clock. Mr. Blandford sat there reading

"I hope I'm not intruding?" said Mercy. "Not at all, not at all," said Moses. "The truth is, I'm very glad to see you. I wanted to tell you something."

"Now it's coming," thought Miss Chequerfield. "Though perhaps I've no right to take dime I gave him had a hole in it."it for granted you are interested in my Washington Star.

me," she murmured. I've just got a letter from my wife, and she's coming on next week." "From-your-wife?" "Yes," said Mr. Blandford complacently, "and a right smart, stirring woman quaintance, because you've been very kind to me. 'Kind!" Miss Chequerfield thought, with a sinking heart, of the piles of stockings she had patiently darned, the shirts she had mended, the funds she had invested in fancy materials, and she felt, for an instant, almost inclined to commonce a suit for the recovery of money obtained under false pretenses. His wife! had the face to sit there, calmly staring at her, and tell her this! But there is a world of endurance in female human nature, and people have smiled at the rack before now. Chequerfield faltered something about "very happy indeed," and so faded away the last dim sparkle of her lost hope.

SCHECK GOT HER.

Theakson's Objections Didn't Count, and His Daughter is Now Mrs. Scheck.

George Scheck and Miss Pourl Theskson were more determined to get married than the old man Theakson thought, and a little smoother withal then he had counted on. While he was in Topeka yesterday fuming around to keep them from being married here, the young tleman is very mad about if of course.

The couple returned to the city last evening, and will have a reception at their new home at 1005 Morris avenue "Of course." this evening. Scheck is a conductor on "Well, that's all right, except about the electric line here, and seems to be a
